College news media are any news/feature publications issued under the name of the college, funded by the District, and produced by students as an integral part of instruction in the Communication Studies program. It may include, but is not limited to, student newspaper reporting, broadcast news journalism, content aired on the campus radio station, and internet news journalism. The term "editorial" refers to all content other than advertising.

College news media, as laboratory publications of the Communication Studies program curriculum, shall provide a vehicle to prepare students to meet the requirements of the AA-T degree in Journalism.

College news media are valuable aids in establishing and maintaining an atmosphere of free and responsible discussion. College news media shall exercise editorial freedom in order to maintain their integrity as vehicles for free inquiry and free expression in the college community. At the same time, the editorial freedom of the college news media shall entail corollary responsibilities.

Each college newspaper or other news medium is published as a learning experience, offered under the Communication Studies program. The editorial and advertising materials published in each news medium, including any opinions expressed, are the responsibility of the student staff. Under appropriate state and federal court decisions, these materials are free from prior restraint by virtue of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.
